His mother died when he was nine months old, and his father later remarried widow Mary Lillian (Armsworthy) Dunbar when Fred was three. Lil lovingly raised him thereafter.

Fred had to quit school in the sixth grade to help work on the family farm due to his father suffering a stroke. Fred and his brothers built “exercise” equipment according to his father’s specifications so their father could regain his strength and mobility. Fred worked for Washington Coal Company first delivering ice then delivering oil, and finally as an oil burner engineer. He later worked for Hessick Oil Company as an oil burner engineer. When he retired at age 81 he worked as a driver for Melwood Horticultural Center for the mentally challenged.
